2022 sees Canadian workers taking more vacation and paying less "time off tax" - ADP survey

Canadian workers are slowly reprioritizing taking time off, but those using all of their vacation days remain below pre-pandemic levels.

TORONTO, Dec. 14, 2022 /CNW/ - An average of three in 10 (29%) working Canadians surveyed say they used all of their vacation time in 2022, a two percentage-point increase from 2021 (27%), but well below 2019 figures (48%). The survey also found that the "time off tax" employed Canadians incur has decreased for a second consecutive year.

Time off tax cut

According to the survey, the average Canadian worker is paying less time off tax with nearly a third (31%) saying they haven't worked any extra hours before or after taking a one-week vacation. Those who clocked extra time to make up for a week off reported investing an average of 20 additional hours to prepare and return from their vacation. This represents a 1 hour decrease from last year, and 14 hours less than the 2020 average, the highest tax reported to date:

A 'staycation' for employed Canadians

Most working Canadians (69%) say they will not travel during the holiday season, representing a 7-percentage point decrease from last year.

Over half (56%) of respondents said current inflation levels played a role in their holiday travel plans.

"The data from our annual time off tax survey indicates a promising shift in Canadian workers taking back their time to disconnect from work," said Heather Haslam, Vice President of Marketing, ADP Canada. "However, it's important for employers to acknowledge that vacation levels continue to fall below pre-pandemic levels and external factors can impact Canadians' ability to take time off. Organizations that can help workers prioritize healthy work life habits may contribute to increasing engagement and employee retention levels."

Canadian workers slowly reverting to pre-pandemic vacation habits

2020 clearly marked a rupture in both time off tax levels and the number of days off the average Canadian employee took. While time off tax numbers and vacation levels slowly rebound, survey data indicates there is still work to do to ensure employees disconnect and rest.

"As we look ahead to a new year, it is promising to see a decrease in amounts of time off tax and also that Canadians are taking more of their allocated time off. 2023 marks an opportunity for employers to equip employees for wellness by encouraging workers to recharge and disconnect – promoting engagement and productivity," concluded Haslam.

Survey Methodology

This survey was conducted by Maru Public Opinion_using its sample and data collection experts at Maru/Blue November 25-27 2022 among a random selection of 811 Canadian workers who are Maru Voice Canada online panelists. The data were weighted to match the population Census data. For comparison purposes, a probability sample of this size has an estimated margin of error (which measures sampling variability) of +/- 3.4%, 19 times out of 20. Further details may be found at Canadian Public Opinion Polls | Maru Group.

About ADP Canada

Designing better ways to work through cutting-edge products, premium services and exceptional experiences that enable people to reach their full potential. HR, Talent, Time Management, Benefits and Payroll. Informed by data and designed for people.

For more information about ADP Canada visit www.adp.ca or follow us on Instagram @ADP Canada

SOURCE ADP Canada Co.

For further information: Hayley Suchanek, Kaiser & Partners, 289-681-2477, hayley.suchanek@kaiserpartners.com

Additional assets available online: Additional assets available online:

 $\underline{https://mediacentre.adp.ca/2022-12-14-2022-sees-Canadian-workers-taking-more-vacation-and-paying-less-time-off-tax-ADP-survey}$